EVERY FRIDAY.

As HE was going home from his office Monday night, Joseph B. Rucker, editor of the Somerset Reporter, was fired at by a cowardly assassin hid in the darkness and two of the three shots struck him in the back. He fell, apparently dead, been very long since the same gentleman was clubbed from behind by a man up of his deeds by the editor, and the of justice no doubt emboldered the cowardly scoundrel to do his infamous work. The citizens are thoroughly aroused and case that needs no judge and jury and a terror to evil doers, as every editor should feel it his duty to do. He leaves a wife and three children, all of them grown, who have the consolation that he died a victim of what seemed to be to him his duty. We sympathize sincerely with them and execrate the miserable fiend, who has deprived them of a husband's and father's love and protection. May the crime be wiped out in short order so far as the life of the assassin is able

The county has being among the last to fall into line. It offered $1,000 reward for his capture, the is a duty of the democracy of Lincoln State $500 and a brother-in-law of the deceased $500. We are not so credulous to believe that the governor will be able to overcome the 10,000 republican majority of the 11th district, but there oughly informed as to the new method, is not another democrat in the district who can give Col. Adams as close a race as he can. He is a very captivating thoroughly informed. And when Nostump speaker and is as popular as he is clever and handsome. > It is little wonder that murder and other lawlessness hold high carnival in Kentucky, when a life sentence is given for a crime for which the death penalty would poorly atone. Brookshire, the horse thief, who killed the jailer and constable who tried to arrest him, was tried at Frenchburg Monday and given the former sentence. The people were so outraged that they would have quick y put an end to the wretch's life, but the officers spirited him away and by a circuitous route landed him at Frankfort. With tender-hearted juries and weak judges, lynch law will continue to be resorted to and in such a case as this it will be justifiable.

Gov. HILL has proved that he is not only a democrat, but a man every inch of him. His speech at Brooklyn in advocacy of democratic doctrines and the election of Cleveland and Stevenson, is full of wisdem and eloquence and contains enough key notes for the whole campaign. His utterances on the tariff and other issues are clearer than the clearest and the whole speech demonstrates that if he had any bitterness, he has been the same unworthy hands. A SUMMER GIRL'S PLAN.

Some Advertisements That May Help Out

a Summer Resort. A particularly healthy and happy summer girl, who has gained several hundred extra freckles this season, suggests as the result of her summer's experience a new form of outdoor advertising.

Since people will decorate the landscape with advertisements, she proposes to replace the usual recommendations of soap powders and stove polish with something in this style:

Making It Easy for Him,

The time was approaching midnight. The old gent was listening from a coign of vantage at the head of the stairs. He had been there in his stocking feet for as long as thirty-two minutes.

The young man was lingering at the front door with the old gent's daughter. As a lingerer he was a success, and he was aided and abetted by the girl.

This also the old gent knew, as well as several other interesting things. That's why he became tired of listening at the head of the stairs.

He was not hearing any news. At last he heard a shuffling of feet. "It is so hard to say good night, darling," the young man said to the girl, who believed every word he uttered. As they always do before matrimony gets in its baleful work. "Don't say it, George," sung out the old man; "wait about five minutes and say 'good morning.' " It was then the impediment in George's speech was removed, and with at least four and a half minutes to spare the girl closed the front door, and George trotted along home.-Detroit Free Press.

Unprepared. "These apple dumplings of yours, Lobelia," said Mr. McSwat with emphasis, as he turned the half eaten one on his plate over and inspected the other side. "are positively"-

"Dear, dear, Tommy! Where on earth did you get that toy pistol?" "The doctor next door gave it to me."

He Was All Right.

A New York gentleman returning home at a late hour is halted by a mendicant:

To Do Away with Full Dress.

The Earl of Dysart, writing to the London Times of a recent date, calls for modification of the strict rule that governs dress at the opera-as well as in most other theaters-in London. He says: "Owing to the present ridiculous system of compulsory evening dress, which exists nowhere else in the world, and also the uncertain delays between the acts and the impossibility of ascertaining the time of finish, thousands are practically prevented from going to the opera at all, as the inconvenience of such useless restrictions to persons like myself living out of London, but within the twelve mile radius, is obvious. At present many are compelled to leave before the end in order to catch the midnight trains. That every one should have to appear in evening dress at the Italian opera may be perfectly right, with its star system, where fashionable

"I venture to suggest that art should be democratic, as it is on the Continent, and I therefore feel sure you will agree with me in thinking that such rules are the shore at 8 a. m. in the company of a altogether out of place at the German opera, which is, or ought to be, resorted to for the sake of art and not for fashion. I appeal to those who think with me in this matter to use their influence to abolish these dress restrictions. Sir Augustus Harris has already done something in this direction, and would doubtless do more were it not for British insular prejudice. In Germany the opera is a popular institution owing to the fact that people can go without ceremony. Let us hope that this will soon be the case in England."

London to Have a New Bridge.

London, in addition to that well nigh consummated monument of engineering science opposite the tower, is to have a new steel bridge at an estimated cost of £380,000. The existing structure which spans the Thames at Vauxhall, once so the rocks at sunset about the middle of famous for its royal gardens, is soon to the season: An irritable temper, and be a thing of the past. Its foundations are reported on the resort to introduce them .- Youth's Com- authority of divers to be, if not exactly tottering, at least in so bad a condition that the structure would in a comparatively short period become absolutely unsafe.

The projected new bridge is of course to be much wider than its predecessor, which measures only thirty-six feet between parapets, compared with the eighty-five feet of the broadest bridge in Europe, that elegant metallic frame work which unites the Middlesex and Surrey shores at Westminster.-Iron.

Stole a Blacksmith Shop.

H. H. Yarnell is a contractor who resides within a mile of Blairsville Intersection. Some time ago he was awarded the contract for the building of a branch railroad from the main line into a coal and timber tract. The road is to be three miles in length. In order to better complete his work Mr. Yarnell purchased a complete outfit for blacksmithing and had it set up along the line of his work.

In taking the contract for the work he soon discovered some difficulties to encounter other than snakes, rocks and Hungarian idleness. His blacksmith tools began to disappear. First the hammer and tongs were missing from their place. Being charitably disposed, he was first inclined to blame the pilfering on the snakes, as he had heard some gigantic stories of their depredations in that district. Arriving at his shop one morning recently, he discovered that his anvil had disappeared during the night.

This was more than his patience could endure; consequently the snakes are exempted from all complicity in the matter, and man, depraved human nature, stands charged with a new crime-that of stealing a whole blacksmith shop. Mr. Yarnell is expecting the rails for his road in a few days. When they come he says he is going to secure them with "No, you muttonhead," responded the a padlock until he gets time to spike

The Value of Slaps.

A local magistrate at Pottstown has established a fixed value for slaps. A young married woman had her husband arrested for slapping her and was awarded one dollar apiece for five slaps, which the ungallant husband was compelled to pay over to the insulted wife. Whether he considered them cheap at that price is not stated, but the woman in the case was tickled to death over the result of her appeal to the law.

What will become now of that clause in the statutes that permits a man to chastise his wife it is impossible to predict, but the Pottstown squire has established a precedent that threatens serious complications with the liberties of married men of the commonwealth. -Oil City Derrick.

Using Pigeons for Smuggling. A curious utilization of carrier pigeons was recently attempted in Belgium. This was making them carry contraband goods into France. For a short time twenty-four pigeons were let off regularly from the Belgian dovecote, each burdened with a small coil of tobacco. They arrived at the French destination rather exhausted and doubtless glad to be relieved of their load. In one case, however, unfortunately for this bright scheme, a pigeon in making the flight and proving unequal to the effort, or perhaps poisoned by the nar-

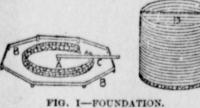

SILO BUILDING.

Silos Are Best Because Least

Exposed to Weather. Professor F. H. King furnishes to The Rural New Yorker a valuable illustrated paper showing how to build a round silo, as follows:

Round silos may be build of wood, stone, brick or metal. They require less material than rectangular silos, and will usually be found cheaper for a given storage capacity. Round silos of any of the materials named may be readily constructed as small as twelve feet

The foundation of the round silo, as of any other, should consist of masonry, and if the wall does not extend more than eighteen inches above the surface of the ground, its thickness need not exceed eighteen inches. Where the silo is an attachment to a basement barn, and where it is practicable to do so, the bottom should extend to the level of the floor upon which the stock is fed. The round silo of wood may be set upon a stone basement extending eight or ten feet below the surface of the ground as readily and with the same advantage as any other type. Indeed, I would urge the general practice of sinking the bot-tom of the silo at least two, if not three, feet below the bottom of the feeding stable, wherever the ground is dry enough to prevent water from draining into it.

In Fig. 2 is shown one method of laying and leveling the foundation wall where it is only two or three feet high. A is a center post with its top level with that of the proposed wall; BB, boards nailed to stakes, their tops level with that of the center post, and C is a straight edge which turns on a pin at A. A simpler method is to drive down a stake like a fork handle at the center and then bore through a board a hole large enough to slip easily over the stake; then, on cutting this board to the length of the radius of the silo wall, it can be turned about in determining the position of the outer edge of the latter. When the wall is once started it can be laid up with the plumb or level like any other. In bringing it to a level a long straightedge may be used, reaching from the center to the wall, or it may be laid upon the wall directly, stretching from point to point like the chord of a circle. The top of the wall inside should be leveled so as nearly to meet the lining of the structure above, as shown in Fig. 2. Showing the construction of all wood round silo. Sills 2 by 4's cut in sections on a radius of the silo circle, bedded in mortar and toe-nailed together. Plates the same, spiked to tops of studding. Studding 2 by 4's one foot apart. Short lengths may be used, lapped, to get the depth; 16's and 14's will give a silo thirty feet deep. Lining made from fencing ripped in two. Outside sheeting the same. Siding for silos under thirty feet outside diameter, common siding rabbeted; for silos more than twenty-eight feet outside diameter. common dropsiding or shiplap may be used. A shows ventilators between studding. Auger holes are bored at bottom between studding, and the boards lack two inches of reaching plate at top, inside. Both sets of openings are covered with wire cloth to keep out vermin. There should be a line of feeding doors from top to bottom, each two to three feet by five feet and about two to five feet apart.

The sills and plates are most simply made by cutting 2-inch lumber, of the same width as the studding, into sections of from two to four feet long, according to the diameter of the silo, sawing on the bevel determined by the direction of the radius of the circle; those for the sills are bedded in mortar and toenailed together, and those for the plates spiked down upon the top of the studding.

Where the silo does not exceed thirty feet in diameter 2 by 4 studding gives ample strength, and in no case is it necessary to use studding larger than 2 by 6. The use of the studding is to hold the lining and siding in place and to support the roof. In the round silo the strain from the ensilage is sustained by the lining and siding, each course acting as a hoop. The distance between the studding in silos less than thirty feet in diameter should be one foot. In those over thirty feet the studding may be sixteen inches apart. After the sills are placed the studding should be toenailed to them just as in a balloon frame, and each stud plumbed and stayed with a board pailed to a post set in the center of the silo. After plumbing and staying the studding in this direction, it may be stayed in an opposite one by springing 16-inch boards around and tacking them to the studding.

The lining should be of 1/2-inch lumber, and may be obtained by splitting fencing in two or by a special order at the mills. Two thicknesses, with a layer of good tar paper between, are required, and the two layers of boards should break joints. Experience may show it best to use three layers of 1/2-inch lumber with two layers of tar paper between to secure perfect ensilage next the wall, but the additional layer may be added at any time.

The siding may consist of two layers with paper between where the temperature of win-ter demands them. When the circle is less than thirty feet 1/2-inch lumber should be used, and the siding must be rabbeted to lie as shiplap does. Common house siding, rabbeted, answers every purpose, and is made to order by some mills. Where the circle exceeds thirty feet in diameter drop siding may be used, that of the shiplap type being most easily put on. The nailing inside and out should be thorough and in every stud, because the boards act as hoops and the lengthwise strain comes upon the nails; for this reason also the boards should be made to break joints on the studding. For the inside lining, it is better to use 10-penny nails for the last thickness so as to draw the layers tightly together, and in nailing the lining be careful not to miss the studding, as every nail hole thus formed will admit a large amount of air.

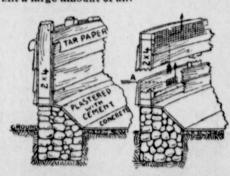

FIG. II-CONSTRUCTION.

In putting on the siding and the lining also, after the first course of boards is in place, the next should be started one stud back of where the first was begun, so that the ends of two corners shall not meet on the same stud. This should be rigidly observed to secure the greatest strength and to keep the circle true at all times. When these precautions are observed, it is unnecessary to stay the tops of the studding before beginning to put on the siding, which should go on before the lining. The method of ventilating between the studding is shown in Fig. 2. Three 34-inch augur holes or a single 2-inch one may be made through the bottom board between each pair of studs and covered on the inside with wire netting to keep out vermin. At the top, inside, the lining lacks 114 to 2 inches of reaching the plate, and the interspace provides means for a current of dry air entering below from the outside to escape through the ventilator in the roof. The openings at the bottom outside may be provided with sliding lids held in place by a single screw, if experience proves that they need be closed during very severe weather.

RANGE CATTLE TROUBLES.

Montana and Wyoming Are

Overcrowded. The area of the ranges is becoming more and more restricted every year. Not only is the area being gradually lessened, but the grass upon the ranges is being more and more eaten and trodden out, so that the ranges will not support as many cattle per acre as they did in years past.

Even when the rains are copious the grass never appears as lexurious as it was twenty years ago, and the reason is that the grass has been overpastured so continuously that it has had no opportunity to recover its old exuberance.

Under present conditions this bad state of affairs must continue. The owners of cattle are permitted to use any part of the public domain for pasture. One man has as much right to pasture the public domain as another. If one cattle owner has occupied a certain district of country for pasturage any other cattle owner can drive his cattle on the same ground. The mutual understanding and forbearance of cattle owners has alone prevented serious difficulties between them. The differences between Abraham and Lot show that like troubles must occur where any pasture is overcrowded.

The ranges of Montana and Wyoming are now overcrowded. There is more danger to the cattle interests from overcrowding than from stealing. As the country settles up this danger must in-

The question naturally arises, Is there no way of preventing the overcrowding of the ranges? If all our lands could be occupied by small farmers and stock growers in another generation the whole matter would be practically settled. But there must always remain large bodies of land which can be put to no practical use except for pasturage. The question is therefore a vital one and must be solved. As the ranges become more circumscribed and the grass under the present system of pasturage poorer and poorer, conflicts must arise between cattle owners. These owners will not be able to agree to disagree, as did Abraham and Lot. The law must step in and make some regulations to preserve the peace between cattle owners and property in cattle, unless a valuable interest is permitted to be destroyed. The best plan, it seems to us, is for the state governments to be given control of the ranges and the officers of the respective counties, with proper supervision, be required to make such divisions in the range as the face of the country will permit, leasing the right of pasture in such divisions as they may choose to make for a term of years, and using the money so obtained to police the several counties so as to prevent any trespassing or injury to stock growing. At any rate things cannot go on as they are now. Already owners of large numbers of cattle are preparing to go out of the business, for they foresee disaster if it is to be continued as now conducted .- Montana Farming and Live Stock Journal.

Live Stock Points.

Almost as great a show as a circus was the advent in New York city of 2,000 unbroken horses from a Montana ranch. They were taken to the big city to be sold, and attracted crowds at the yards where they were corraled in the upper part of the city. It is safe to say that few of the thousands of visitors had ever seen untamed western horses before. To the small boy they were a godsend. They were mostly of the mustang size and build, though there was some Clydesdale blood intermixed. Those of mustang kind sold for from twenty to forty dollars apiece. It was fun indeed to see the new owners leading off by a rope around his neck a wild horse just purchased. It was more fun yet when they began the breaking in operation. Sometimes a genuine cowboy such as New Yorkers had never seen outside of a Buffalo Bill show went along and gave the new owner the first lesson in tackling his purchase. To see a fat and timid German grocer trying to coax and pat a wild mustang and honey him into harness was a sight never to be forgotten.

In making calculations ahead for the live stock feed crop of next year, do not forget to provide for rape for pasture.

In the large cities of the eastern markets the latter part of this summer sound horses five to eight years old, well broken and in good condition, have brought prices as follows: Heavy drafters, weighing 1,500 to 1,700 pounds, $150 to $250; express horses, $150 to $225; "chunks and streeters," weighing 1,050 to 1,250 pounds, $90 to $135. Good drivers always sell well at prices higher than those quoted. Poor horses-well, nobody wants poor horses at any price if he can get anything else.

On frosty mornings remember to keep your stock off rape pasture till the sun dries it, so as to avoid bloat. When the cattle and sheep are very hungry keep them off the rape till they have had a bite of something else. Eating too greedily of rape is injurious. Let them have all the salt they want on rape pasture, but they need no grain.

Range horses wholly unbroken sell better in the markets than those half broken.

THE COMING BEEF.

The Animal That Cattlemen Will Find Most Profitable.

Undoubtedly the most marked change in the handling of beef cattle during the past few years has been the system. now in vogue and rapidly increasing, of finishing off a steer for the block before he has turned 2 years old. Great credit must be given to the fat stock shows for having educated the rank and

Our surplus has to face the fierce fire of competition from all parts of the globe. In the southern part of this continent are vost herds of cattle whose owners have to find a market for their overflow. In Australia the cry is echoed across the sea of too much beef and mutton. Even in some of the European countries there is meat for export. For years past our safety has lain in a virgin soil, a generous climate and cheap transportation, but the improvements in steamships is bridging vast distances, and the era of fiercer competition looms up in the distance. We must be up and doing. You cannot reduce the cost of beef production as if it were wheat, by cheaper machinery and improved methods of handling. You can of course help it in this way, but the only true system is to improve the breed and handle it more judiciously. Improvement of blood comes largely from capital, but it takes skill, science and practical experience added to the above to produce first class beef in half the time required some years ago, even provided you have the material to work upon. To obtain this end an animal must be fed from its infancy. It must never be allowed to retrograde. We do not say it should be crowded right along, but the growth must be steadily onward. and toward the end the pressure must be greater. The profitable time to sell a bullock just now is when it has reached 1,250 to 1,300 pounds, live weight, and that weight should be reached before 2 years old with average feeding. Where one buyer will look at a big, fat 1,500-pound bullock you have three or four customers for the lighter weight. The producer should cater to the consumer's taste. In doing so he helps himself at the same time. In this mundane sphere the reward of skill and science generally comes in the shape of dollars.-Live Stock Report.

Cheviot Sheep.

These are the sheep from which the Scotch cheviot wool fabrics now so fashionable are made, The sheep themselves are natives of the Cheviot hills, between England and Scotland. They produce an average of five pounds of wool. For either a wool or a mutton sheep the Cheviot is highly prized. Henry Stewart says that when fed on "sweet, dry herbage" the mutton is most choice. This dry herbage is found in all our western states, and it looks as if the Cheviot would be particularly adapted to that part of the country. At any rate a more general trial of the breed ought to be made by those who have time and can afford it. We have an American Merino. We might perhaps also in the course of a few years get an American Cheviot as famous.

The Cheviot sheep is hornless, which is in its favor. The face is considerably Roman nosed. The legs and face are white, occasionally spotted with dun. Stewart says of these sheep in their native land, "They fatten quickly on turnips after pasture, without grain, and make a dressed weight of eighty pounds at 3 years old." The ewes in Great Britain are cross bred with mutton rams to produce lambs for market. We would like to see this tried in America more generally, as the Cheviot ewe is an excellent mother. The Cheviot is one of the hardiest breeds of sheep known.

Anthrax in Delaware.

An important meeting of the farmers of New Castle county was held to consider measures for stamping out an outbreak of anthrax, a fatal contagious disease among the cattle of this vicinity.

The meeting was attended by about 200 of the most substantial farmers of the county. It is reported that twentythree cows and three horses have died of the disease within a radius of two miles of Newport within a month.

The meeting was addressed by Dr. Leonard Peasson, of the University of Pennsylvania, and Dr. H. P. Eves, of Wilmington, professor of veterinary surgery at Delaware college. Dr. Pearson explained that the early symptoms of the disease were similar to sunstroke, it was almost always fatal in its results: and that the bacilli of the disease propagated with extraordinary rapidity and were extremely hard to destroy, the only sure way to get rid of them being by fire. Dr. Eves, who has made post mortem examinations of several anthrax carcasses, agreed with Dr. Pearson as to symptoms, and said that there was no remedy he could recommend except the extermination of animals affected by the disease and the destruction of the carcasses by fire or deep burial, the grave to be not less than five feet from the level of the ground. The meeting appointed a committee to secure needed legislation for the official extermination of affected cattle and the remuneration of their owners .-Philadelphia Ledger.

MUTTON SHEEP.

He Punctures Some Fairy Tales, and His Language Is Plain.

ewes to a "scrub" coarse wooled ram. The result was a lot of very good lambs, which fattened well and brought a good price when sold in July. Next year I purchased a thoroughbred Shropshire ram. His get was a marked improvement over the others, yet when placed on the market they brought but little more than the scrubs. The improvement was sufficient to justify me in buying a high priced ram, but it would nowhere compare with that which the keepers of stud flocks claim to result therefrom. The enormous carcasses and prices which S. H. Todd and others get for winter fed, half blood Shrops, from "old broken down Merino ewes," induced me to try winter feeding: eighty pounds being the average weight and six cents the price, $4.80 was the amount realized per head at ten months old. This was far below Todd's $7.50 and $8 per head.

Last year I purchased fifty grade ewes and another Shropshire ram. 1 was disappointed in getting the ram at the time I wished to turn in, and the lambs did not begin to come until April 14. From the statements of many breeders I had every reason to expect seventy-five lambs from the fifty ewes. It was a sore disappointment when they dropped but fourteen pairs of twins. Three ewes were barren, leaving me only sixty-one lambs dropped, five of which died. But this is not the worst. When the hot weather came the lambs them, and in spite of all the remedies 1 tried more than one-half of them died. and the others were not fit for market. The ewes averaged 41/2 pounds of wool at thirty cents, making $1.35 for wool. I have the surviving twenty-four lambs. worth about $2.50 per head. So $2.55 is the amount realized per head from the ewes, while fifty Merino wethers paid me $2.50 in wool, and there was no money laid out for ram and extra care in lambing season, such as is necessary softly inquired.

Although I am sick of mutton sheep I shall give them another trial. I bred my grade ewes and twenty half bloods of my own raising to lamb in February. 1 had a few lambs to come in February last year. They paid me much better sisted. than the April lambs, but forty-five pounds when sixty-two days old was the best I could do. I expect to be more successful this year, but I have learned not to expect such crops of lambs and enormous weights as boasted of by so many breeders. When C. Hills tells of threequarter blood Shropshires being mistaken for imported ewes, and of a friend of his who bred common ewes to Shropshire rams and sold the lambs at four months old for fourteen dollars a head. I become skeptical. Nearly all the Shropshire men claim an average of from eight to ten pounds of wool from their entire flock. I do not wish to dispute their word, but everything in my experience tends to make me doubt their | those. Ump. statements. My rams shear 5, 634 and 7 pounds respectively. My half bloods were from heavy shearing Merino ewes, and averaged 51/4 pounds only, and poor quality at that. I have seen several stud flocks, examined many sheep at fairs, and think, so far as wool is concerned, my sheep are fully up with the average. This one stockmen, the telling of everything good. and the secret guarding of every loss, is stock with expectations far beyond that which they can ever realize. Is it any wonder they find a ready sale for their stock at prices far beyond its real value when their articles never tell of the the old ewes which do not produce enough wool to keep the sun from blistering their skin, or the scalawag lambs they send to the shambles so that they may keep their flocks from degenerating? The political liar is condemned in no uncertain terms, yet the thoroughbred stock raisers are allowed to go on from year to year "gulling" the unwary by their system of misrepresentation, and if any one is so bold as to raise their voice against them he brings down upon jeers, and is reminded that he is still in the old ruts and "does not read the papers." No one can welcome improved methods more than I, both in breeding and care of stock, but I think too much importance is placed upon the thoroughbred. It is all right to begin well if you can afford it, but if farmers would do their own thinking perhaps they would learn that the trumped up thoroughbred, when placed on their farms and receiving the indifferent care and miscellaneous breeding which their present flocks get, would in a few years be less desirable stock than that of which they took the place, and probably they would learn that the present system of caring for thoroughbreds if applied to their common breeds would be less expensive and more satisfactory than the establishment of new flocks at exorbitant prices. -Cor. Ohio Farmer.

Live Stock Points.

Eggs for hatching should not be more than a week old. Beyond this there is danger of the germ dying.

Dry leaves may be used to great advantage for bedding. They are both comfortable and absorbing.

About this time of year sow some rve for winter pasture for the lambs. In the spring it will likewise be a grateful bite of green for the animals that have been on dry feed. After that you can plow it under if you like.

In casting about in your mind as to what you are going to do about fattening your hogs this fall, remember that they should be disposed of as soon as they are fat. Keeping them a day beyond that is a loss. Pigs dropped in February or March can be made ready for the fall killing. Make preparations for these pigs now, a year ahead.
